The player just needs to complete the tasks given.

While the player need to complete their tasks, he also need to keep in mind not to raise the suspicion of his family members.

Further Developments

First Idea: Larger Maps, More Tasks

Player can find the game boring after completing it multiple times.

Expansion of the map allows greater freedom of the player movement to discover and explore.

More tasks can add greater opportunities for the players to take risks completing the tasks.

Second Idea: Sandbox Game Mode

Players can customise the game to their own difficulty.

The main core mechanics of the game is the suspicion meter, tasks completion and buffs+debuffs.

This can cater to different types of players, not only to adventure type of players but also competitive type of players.

Third Idea: More Roles in Society

Jim is currently only an unemployed human being.

With characters with more roles, players can feel a sense of sympathy towards the character they are playing.

It is also more realistic as it mimics real world situation, allowing players to feel a greater immersion in the game.

Why would it be fun to play?

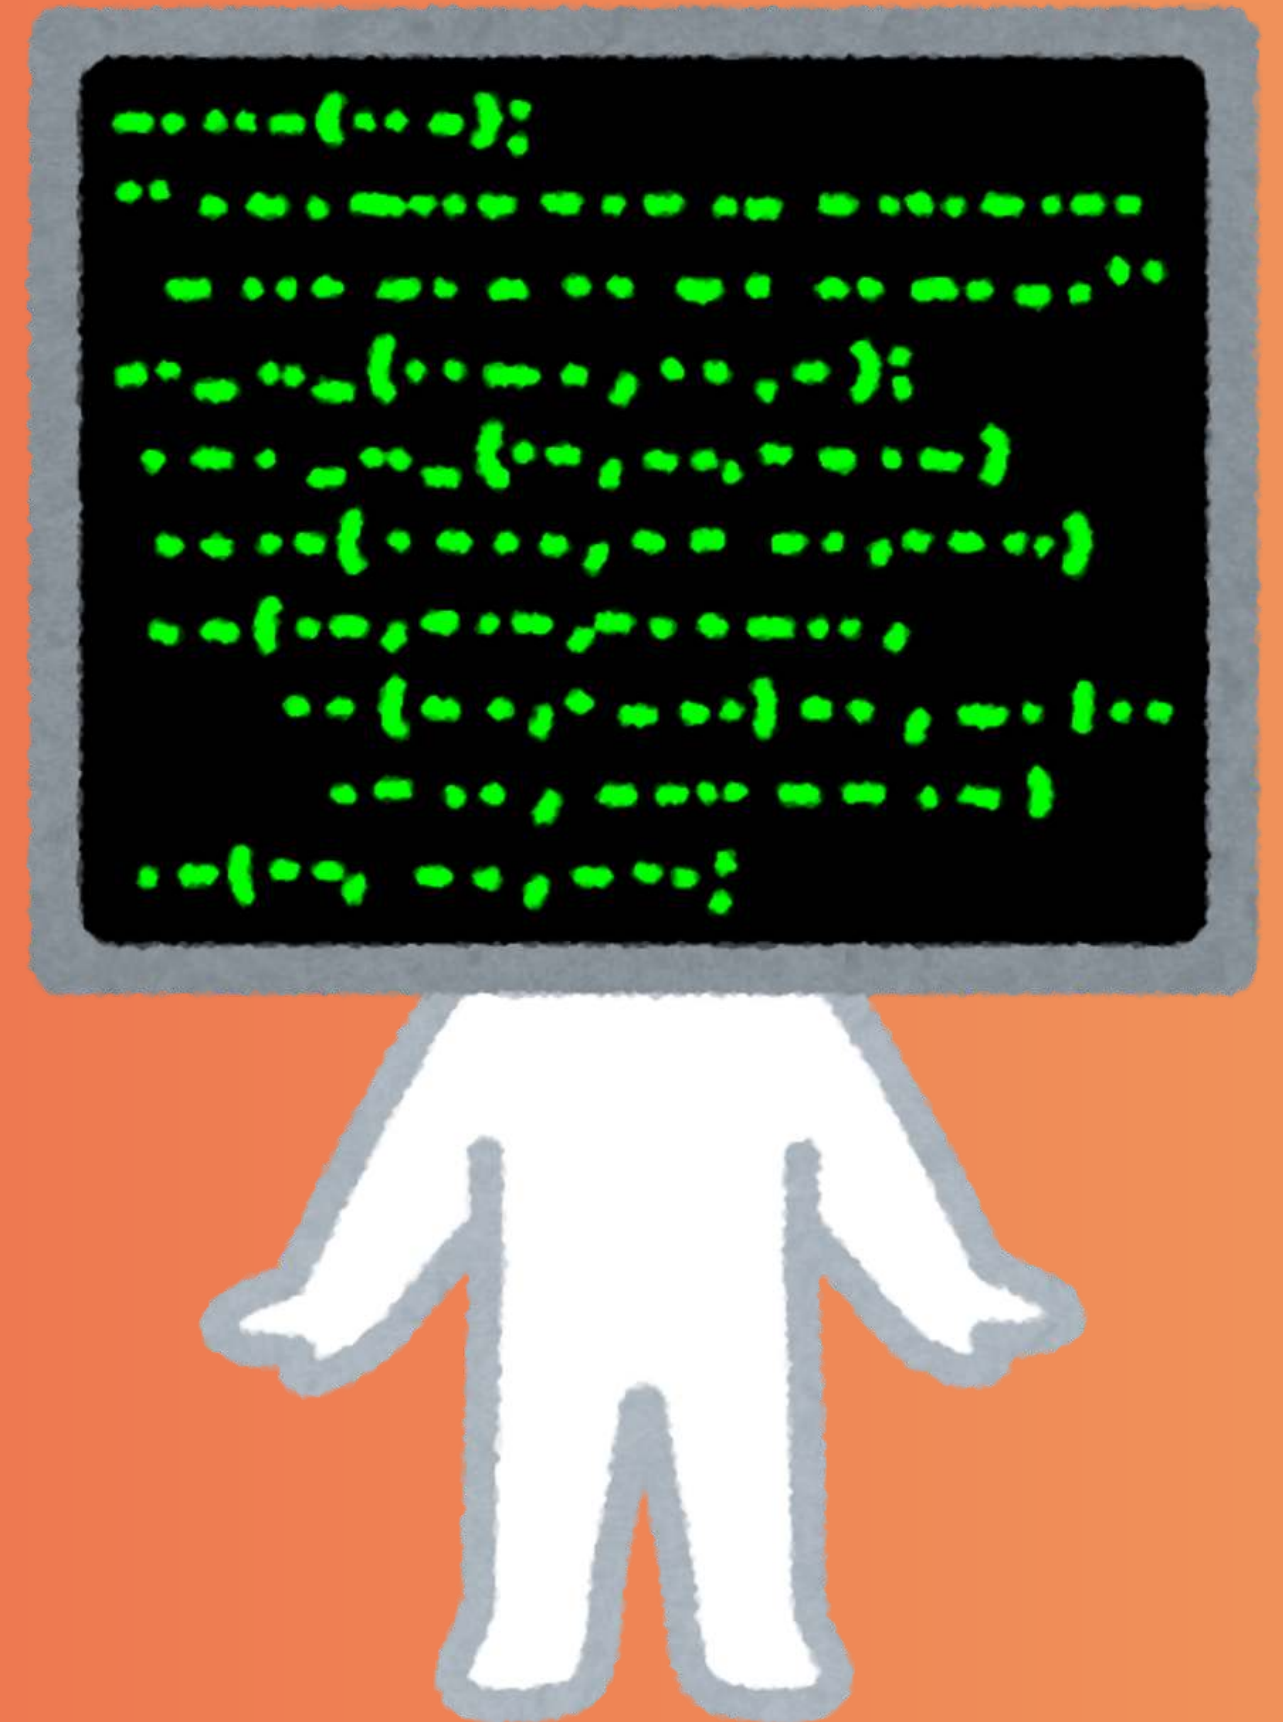

Decoding Reality

Since the Hungry Ghost cannot fully understand human language, players see a distorted version of the world.

The player must:

- Observe the environment
- Watch NPC reactions
- Infer meaning
- Take risks

This creates puzzle-solving gameplay similar to being trapped in a foreign culture where you do not understand the language.

Social Horror / Being an Imposter

The player constantly tries to appear normal.

A relative asks: “Do you remember what happened at Grandma’s funeral?”

The ghost has no idea.

The player must:

- Bluff
- Avoid the question
- Search for clues beforehand
- Piece together memories
